In a small village surrounded by lush green hills, there lived a kind boy named Rohan. Rohan loved animals and spent most of his time caring for them. He had a pet dog named Bruno and a cat named Mimi. Every morning, Rohan would wake up early, feed Bruno and Mimi, and then visit the nearby forest to check on the injured birds and animals he had rescued.

One day, while walking in the forest, Rohan heard a faint sound. He followed it and found a tiny bird trapped in a bush. Its wing was injured. Carefully, Rohan freed the bird and carried it home. He made a small bed for the bird and fed it seeds and water. Bruno and Mimi also seemed to understand that the bird needed care, and they didn't disturb it.

After a few weeks, the bird was healthy again. One sunny morning, Rohan released the bird, and it flew high into the sky, chirping happily. Rohan felt a sense of joy and pride knowing that he had helped another creature. From that day on, the bird often came back to Rohan's house and sat on his window, as if to say thank you.
